New affordable options for new homes in rural areas

Campac Australia, one of Queensland's leading transportable building manufacturers has launched a revised range of new affordable homes, specifically designed to suit Queensland rural regions – the "Country Series".

"Using customer feedback, and researching what has been available in the marketplace, helped us determine what we needed to include in our designs to make them appeal to the wider public across rural Queensland" says Jason van Hooft, Sales Manager of Campac.

Campac has long enjoyed a strong reputation in the transportable building industry, however recently has expanded its residential manufacturing arm to help fill the need for quality affordable housing.

"By manufacturing in a factory environment we are able to reduce buildings costs, but more importantly increase the quality output of our finished product. Transportable houses have long been perceived as an alternative building option, but our unique construction method means we deliver a product to our customer, which provides the exact same level of finish as a traditional house built on site" says Jason.

Campac's level of finish means clients receive a level of comfort normally reserved for executive level homes. They include high quality designer kitchens with stainless steel appliances, fully tiled wet areas, optional covered veranda's and decks, and many features other builders call extras.

The major added value to a client is the building time. By manufacturing homes in factory means Campac can deliver a completed home from start to finish in around 10 to 12 weeks – this is a significant reduction in build time over traditional on site built homes.

"Our new Country Series of homes represents the first step in launching a new exciting range of homes to the market. Over next few months we will be launching several new series including a range of Metro Homes, Coastal homes, and even transportable homes specifically designed to suit hillside sloping land".

Campac has also developed a new online website to showcase its products, and customers can download the latest house designs, and register to keep informed of future design launches – www.campac.com.au.

Combining modern designs with the latest building technologies means we can offer customers a full turnkey new home, delivered and installed on site anywhere in Queensland, on time, and on budget.
